PREFACE

MY thanks are due to the Clarendon Press for permission to publish articles XI, XVI, XVIII, XX, which originally appeared in The Classical Quarterly; to The Johns Hopkins Press for articles I and XVII, which originally appeared in The American Journal of Philology; to the Harvard University Press for article VII, which originally appeared in Harvard Studies in Classical Philology; to the Institute of Classical Studies, University of London, for article IX, which originally appeared in their Bulletin; to the Editor of Mind for articles II, III, V, and VI; to the Editors of The Philosophical Review for articles IV, XII, XIII, XIV, XIX; and to the Society for the Promotion of Hellenic Studies for articles VIII, X, and XV, which originally appeared in The Journal of Hellenic Studies.

Bibliography may be found in Professor Cherniss' articles in Lustrum, 4 (1959) 5-308, and 5 (1960) 321-615. These contain a survey of the literature on Plato from 1950 to 1957, annotated and conveniently arranged by topic; they mention the main contributions to Platonism in this century.

I should like to express my gratitude to Mr. John L. Ackrill, Professor Alan H. Donagan, Mr. David J. Furley, and Professor Gregory Vlastos, for helpful criticism, encouragement, and advice; to Professor W. K. C. Guthrie and Mr. E. J. Kenney, for other kindnesses; to Mr. Martin Mueller for the index locorum; and to Indiana University, which kindly put at my disposal secretarial facilities which made the mechanical burdens of editing much lighter. My greatest debt, as always, is to Ann Usilton Allen, my wife.
